First Aid

What is First Aid?

The first stage in any emergency situation is the identification of the problem and the provision of assistance. When in doubt, or when someone is critically injured or unwell, you should always activate the emergency response system by dialling 999 in the Malaysia or the Emergency Medical Services (EMS) number for your own location. Whenever you are in a position where you are unsure of the severity of the problem, the 911/EMS operator will ask you a series of questions to determine the seriousness of the situation for you, understand all these in HRDF HRD Corp First Aid Training.

Continue to hold the phone line open until additional assistance arrives, or until the 911/EMS operator instructs you to hang up. CPR, using an automated external defibrillator (AED), and providing basic care until additional aid arrives are all actions that emergency system dispatchers can walk you through if you need assistance. Whether you're at home, at work, or at school, you should be aware of the location of the first aid kit and the AED, as well as the contents of each. Learn how to call 911 to summon the assistance of the local emergency medical services (EMS). Be aware of any policies in existence at your place of employment that pertain to medical emergencies, get the information from HRDF HRD Corp First Aid Training.

After assessing the nature of the problem, the next step in offering assistance is to determine the level of responsiveness of the injured or ill individual. The most effective technique to determine this is to tap the person on the shoulder and ask them loudly, "Are you okay?" After determining whether or not someone is responsive, call for assistance. Look for any medical identification, such as a necklace or a bracelet, to make sure you're not missing anything. This could provide a useful insight as to what is causing the problem in the first place.

First Aid

HRDF HRD Corp First Aid Training; SECURITY ON THE SCENE

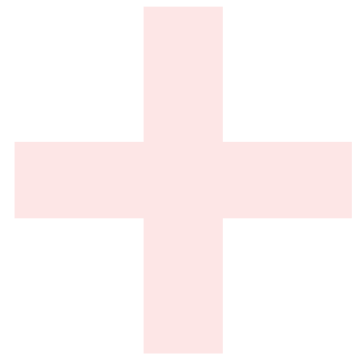

When approaching a scene, it is vital to consider the safety of the immediate surroundings. You do not want to become another victim of an accident or illness, so keep an eye out for any potential threats. Remove the individual from any potential threats, such as the presence of water at the scene of the crime. Keep a sharp eye out for hazards from motor traffic in particular.

First Aid Training; HANDWASHING AND PERSONAL PROTECTION ARE IMPORTANT.

Maintaining good hand hygiene is critical in the prevention of disease and illness. After each episode of care and after putting off gloves, wash your hands thoroughly. When a sink is not available, hand sanitizers should be used. (Although most hand sanitizers are alcohol-based, they can be used as a substitute for handwashing when necessary.)
